REFUGEE VOICES: AFRICA

Africa is the second largest continent in area and in population. It covers about a fifth of the world's land area and has a population of about 898 million, about one-seventh of the world's population. Divided into 53 independent countries and several political units, included within the continent are hundreds of ethnic groups. Most African ethnic groups have their own language or dialect and way of life.

In the latter half of the 19th century, the European "informal" imperialism of control through military influence and economic dominance transitioned to that of direct rule. By the mid-1920s European countries controlled most of Africa. Not until the latter half of the 20th century did independent countries in Africa begin to emerge.

The process of decolonization brought new and powerful political forces into play and released new conflicts which created mass displacement. Many nations in Africa have suffered civil wars and ethnic strife, thus generating a massive number of refugees of many different nationalities and ethnic groups.

The following Pathfinder was developed in partnership with the Media Arts Center San Diego as part of the Refugees Voices Program to aid researchers for the subject of Africa or for individual countries and ethnic groups and for the plight of African refugees.

Funding for the project comes from the California State Library's California Cultural Crossroads Initiative. California Cultural Crossroads is supported by the U.S. Institute of Museum and Library Services under the provisions of the Library Services and Technology Act, administered in California by the State Librarian.
